Hello Council Members,

How is it fair for residents of a small residential community that is now oversaturated with vacation rentals to have to be the ones to monitor the dangerous and all too common disruptive behavior of vacation renters, especially when they have been drinking and frequently are making too large campfires within too close proximity to their residential neighbors homes?

Is it fair that residential communities have to be plagued by disruptive vacation renters on a continual basis?

Ask yourselves Council Members, is this jeopardizing the safety of the residents who now have to be the ones to make a report and face possible retaliation from the offending and many times drunk renter? Especially for our smaller communities who are located several miles from law enforcement.

Do you care?

Vacation Rental Owners and managers should be aware that their renters in the absence of supervision do not always follow the rules.

Is it fair that the rental management company and mostly out of town vacation rental owners reap the financial reward at the full time residents expense for the residents having to continuously monitor the disruptive behavior of vacation renters??

For their own safety.

How is this fair?

Our parks have Park Rangers who are paid to monitor and enforce safe behavior of campers and vacationers.

Vacation rentals used to be located in campgrounds that were commonly designated for campers and vacationers and they should now not be located in residential communities. How is this continually disruptive behavior from renters improving a residential neighborhood?

This is why so many of us who live next door to vacation rentals are angry.

Who is looking out for our communities and our safety?

Vacation Rentals in residential communities are NOT creating a safer community. Too many times, too many strange people are there to party with little accountability in a residential community.

This is not fair.
